

Genetically Modified Organisms (GMO) Statement

Archer Daniels Midland Company (ADM) contracts to procure its raw material corn from only European Union (EU) approved varieties. Due to our large scale of operations, non-GM and GM corn cannot be segregated from one another. Consequently, ADM's products may or may not be produced from GM corn. The list of products can be seen at the end of this document.

Current industry consensus is that GM DNA, or protein, in the raw material stream is denatured, degraded, or removed through refining by successive processing which includes physical separation, heating, purification, and filtration. As a result, GM DNA, or protein, most likely cannot be detected in measurable amounts in highly refined products.

While we do not expect to detect GM DNA or protein, ADM does periodically test for the presence of protein and DNA. Previous samples tested for GM DNA were reported negative by a third party. We are unable to state a limit of detection for DNA given the negative results. In addition, ADM Laboratory tests conducted for protein have tested below a detection limit of 0.1%.
